A Criticism

"Caleb West," by F. Hopkins or Smith, was to me a very interesting book, as it was not only entertaining but instructive. The writer enters into the spirit of fishermen's lives and portrays very vividly the <sup>sp</sup> appearance, customs, and the seafaringmen. Not only is one given an insight into the humble life of the fisherfolk, but also into the grandeur? of New York society life. All the descriptions are given just as clearly as though <sup>sp</sup> an artist had painted them.
 The book is full of minute details, many of which are sensational, as for instance, where the author wished to show the keen anxiety of the men over their tasks. The dialect used adds a final? embellishment to an almost perfect descriptive.

Criticized.

To Fred, there was a tap on the window pane. He dropped the cake and stood in silence. Still another tap and he slyly looked around where he could see the outline of a man. But who was it? The boys fairly shook with fright. The figure had a long gray beard reaching almost to his knees, a fur cap which came to his shaggy eyebrows and a long coat which entirely covered his form. This was surely Santa Claus; he must have known their intentions and he had seen their acts. They both ran as fast as they could; James hid under his bed, while Fred went out a door on the other side of the house, and down the street to his own home.

A Trip to Hampton Beach.

One bright spring morning, a short time ago, a small party, consisting of five girls and one man, made a very pleasant trip to Hampton Beach and back. They began the trip by riding on the steam cars as far as Haverhill, then boarded a electric car marked Amesbury, and from there to Salisbury Beach. When at last they reached the beach after many hindrances, such as changing cars where the tracks had been torn up, and waiting on turnouts, it was almost noon. Now their plan was to walk up the beach, cross the Hampton river on a new bridge, which ~~was~~ <sup>is</sup> ~~being~~ <sup>now</sup> ~~crossing~~ <sup>left over</sup> ~~they found to be completed enough~~ <sup>to</sup> ~~in~~ <sup>crossing</sup> on foot, and then have dinner at Hampton. The tide was ~~going~~ <sup>the</sup> out and the ocean was peculiarly calm without a white cap on it. As they travelled on, they noticed several steam boats along the horizon, and one sail boat was extremely vivid, for the sun so shone on the sails as to give them a golden color which was strongly set off by the dull blue sky in the back ground. "But what of the Zeppelins?"
"Oh, nobody thinks they are all in your favor killed and wounded. Unquestionable, but in England."

... our chief, in his curiosity. And then comes a Zeppelin raid—when the search light piercing the heavens, the exulting shouts of the men at the Zepps and the great anti-aircraft guns—ah!—that is a thing long to be remembered!
